

Do humans naturally interact with an embodied robot? Is the physical nature ultimately important, or will a person have identical reactions to an equivalently programmed graphical agent?

Build a physically embodied robot that can enter into interactions with a person.

Measure the physiological response of people interacting with a 3-D graphical agent and compare it to interacting with a 3-D graphical agent and a physically embodied robot.

